

July 26 2011 CAMJ Seminar

Stacey Chen

Abstract

Due to the demands for more reliable and functionalities in electronic devices, the circuit becomes denser which increase the occurrence of conductive andonic filaments (CAF) formation. This research will determine the effects of curing agents (phenolic vs. DICY) and drilling methods (laser vs. mechanical drilling) on CAF formation.