

Yunsheng Jian

Prof. Li

Development of donor polymer material for solar cells

Polymer solar cells are lightweight, flexible and potentially disposable and inexpensive to fabricate when comparing with traditional silicon-based solar cells. However, due to the inefficiency and stability problems of polymer solar cells, the donor and acceptor photovoltaic materials are widely investigated in order to increase PCE, improve stability and decrease cost of the PSCs.