

Yunsheng Jiang

Prof. Li

Development of donor/acceptor materials for solar cells

Organic solar cells, acting as the alternative candidate for silicon-based solar cells, have the advantages of low cost and high processability. Several advantages such as the tunability of photo and electronic properties, low-cost coating and printing process as well as the mechanical flexibility make polymer-based organic solar cell a promising research topic. As a result, the development of donor/acceptor materials for solar cells is essential.