

Abstract

We consider a portfolio selection problem in the presence of transaction costs. Transaction costs are assumed to be separable convex functions of the amount sold or bought and are nondifferentiable in a finite number of points.

We derive an algorithm for solving this problem, which can be considered a generalization of the active set method.