Course Description
The First World War is a now a century past, but so many questions linger about its origins, conduct and legacy. This course will explore the War as a military, but also a cultural event. It will revisit some of the many myths about the war, and examine how different countries, including Canada, hold different meanings and memories of the conflict.

Course Goals and Learning Outcomes
This course will:
Introduce students to the evolution of historical writing about the First World War.
Engage and explore different myths about the war through discussions and written assignments.
Help students develop an appreciation for the study of relevant primary sources.
