

The PINE Lab offers a wide variety of graduate school application resources, as well as resources for current graduate students and postdocs (credit to Dr. Laurel Gabard-Durnam)

PsychResearchList and Twitter was developed with the goal of making Psychology more accessible for academics at all stages as they navigate various research opportunities in Psychology (credit to Dr. Meltem Yucel)

This Grad School Crash Course video from the University of Connecticut's MAGIC Mentorship Program offers advice on applying to graduate school and tips for choosing the right graduate program for you.

See this useful Twitter thread for a compilation of resources for applying to and navigating through grad school (Credit to Maximilian König)

Dr. Jamil Zaki offers his tips in this guide for applying to grad school (credit to Dr. Jamil Zaki)

Harvard's PhD Resources and Online Tips Page \(PRO-TiP\) offers a series of informational videos where faculty provide answers to common questions regarding the application process

Dr. Peter Sokol-Hessner offers his perspective and guide for applying to grad school specifically aimed at those applying to cognitive psychology and neuroscience programs in the United States (credit to Dr. Peter Sokol-Hessner)

Psychin' Out is a resource hub and global community of aspiring and current psychology students and trainees uplifting each other. Their resource hub has example application materials, useful templates and more! They also have an active Twitter.

STAR Scholars Fall Seminar Series offers an online series of workshops from the University of Michigan. Some topics include "How to get involved in research" and "Life of a doctor, but not that kind!"

The Psychology PhD Podcast is hosted grad students in the Columbia University Psychology department and covers topics such as choosing the right program for you and the application process

This Twitter thread aims to demystify the graduate application process (credit to Cientifico Latino)

The American Psychological Association provides resources to help both current and prospective graduate students navigate their path to a career in psychology!

This collection of resources provides information about applying to PhD programs in psychology and grad fellowships (credit to New York University grad student, Kate Nussenbaum)

This blog post from the LUCK Lab at UC Davis talks about how to email faculty prior to applying to grad school (credit to Dr. Steve Luck and Dr. Lisa Oakes)

Some more advice on crafting your personal statement (credit to Dr. Margaret Echelbarger)

The NextGen Psych Scholars Program is a virtual graduate student-led program centering the experiences of underrepresented (e.g., BIPOC, low-income, LGBTQIA+) students which mentors undergraduates and post-baccalaureates interested in applying to graduate programs in psychology. Their Resources for Mentees page provides many valuable resources, including additional CV and personal statement examples.

The following are links to other mentorship programs which provide additional information and resources:

Application Assistance Program \(AAP\) run by MIT Brain and Cognitive Sciences grad students

The MAGIC initiative (Mentoring Aspiring Graduate Students and building an Inclusive Community) at the University of Connecticut

Project SHORT (Students for Higher-Ed Opportunities and Representation in Training) run by volunteer professional health and graduate students, residents, faculty, and post-docs

The Application Statement Feedback Program \(ASFP\)