INSTRUCTIONS

POSITION OF THE BODY

SIT SQUARELY in front of the desk, close to it, but not leaning against it. Keep the feet flat on the floor in front of the chair. Let the arms rest on the desk with the elbows over the edge about an inch. The right arm should rest lightly on the desk and be free to move in any direction. Sit erect, with the eyes from twelve to fourteen inches from the paper.

Compare your position with the illustrations in your Writing Course.

POSITION OF THE PAPER

The sides of the paper should be placed parallel with the right forearm. In practising an exercise which extends across the page, the forearm should cross the paper lengthwise in the middle of the page. The paper should be held with the left hand above the line of writing.

PENHOLDING

It is unreasonable to expect all pupils to hold the penholder in exactly the same way. The size and shape of the hand are modifying influences. It is safe to say that the penholder should never rest above the knuckle joint of the first finger—the longer the fingers, the nearer the knuckle joint; the shorter and thicker the fingers, the lower it will drop toward the thumb. The first finger should rest on the holder about an inch from the penpoint. The second finger should support the holder anywhere between the root of the nail and the first joint. The thumb, curving outward, should lightly touch the holder somewhere between the end of the first finger and its first joint. The hand should be turned well toward the left and rest on the nails of the third and fourth fingers, which are bent back under the hand. The wrist, which is held nearly flat, should not touch the paper.

Compare how you are holding your pen with the illustrations in your Writing Course.

MOVEMENT

Muscular, or forearm, movement is the foundation of all good writing. Much practice of graded exercises is necessary to acquire control of this movement for writing. Place the arm on the desk, resting on the fleshy part just forward of the elbow and on the nails of the third and fourth fingers. Move the arm and hand, thus placed, forward and backward to secure free, easy movement. In forming the exercises or the letters all movement should come from the arm, and the nails of the third and fourth fingers should move in unison with the point of the pen.

THE DAILY LESSON

If correct movement and good writing are required only in the writing lesson and poorly written work accepted in other lessons, little real progress in writing can be made. The best results will be obtained only when the pupil, at all times, faithfully puts into practice the best of which he is capable.

Good handwriting cannot be acquired in a day. It takes long, careful, persistent practice to write legibly, easily, and rapidly. Success comes to those who earn it.
