

LET'S TALK ABOUT

MANAGED RETREAT

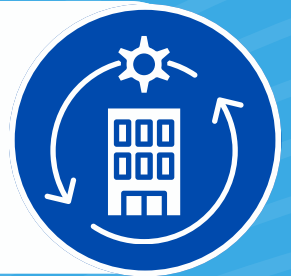

Managed retreat is the strategic relocation of buildings, infrastructure, and other assets away from high-risk areas.

For communities experiencing recurrent hazards, relocation might be the best option to reduce long-term risks.

Retreat is often implemented reactively after a disaster, and this can lead to inequitable, maladaptive outcomes.

In other cases, retreat is left off the table, leaving communities to rebuild in the same place without reducing risks.

But when retreat is proactively integrated into community planning processes, it can be a powerful climate adaptation tool.
