Title

Critical Encounter with Human Nature

Abbreviated Title

Encounter with Human Nature

Description

This course explores issues fundamental to human nature and related theoretical explanations. The approach is interdisciplinary and intercultural/interreligious. Through various assignments, students will gain an understanding of their own perspectives on human nature, the questions of human "being" that those raise, and the purpose of human existence.

Religion and Spirituality in the Social and Legal World

Abbreviated Title

Religion: Social & Legal World

Description

This course examines key substantive, theoretical, and methodological issues in the field of sociology of religion. Students will critically analyze high-profile media and legal cases surrounding the role of religion, spirituality, and secularity in Canadian society. Students will also further their knowledge by completing their own projects in this thematic area, developing both their research and written skills.

Change

Academic Unit ApprovalRationale for Change

The SWREN course code of the 100-300 level cross-listed courses served to track a particular group of students who had been conditionally admitted to the Bachelor of Social Work (BSW) program.

By eliminating the SWREN side of the cross-listed listed courses, Renison will achieve the following: adhere to a requirement of Canadian Association for Social Work Education (the accrediting body for the BSW), reduce inconsistent reporting and teaching credit counts in relation to the equity agreement, support the shift to the new calendar system Kuali, and reduce confusion for students in terms of understanding in which courses they should enroll.

The SWREN offering will be removed and will no longer exist, and the note informing students about registration in the SWREN courses will be removed. The SDS offering will remain active. All units are in agreement with these changes.

Academic Unit ApprovalRationale for Change

The SWREN course code of the 100-300 level cross-listed courses served to track a particular group of students who had been conditionally admitted to the Bachelor of Social Work (BSW) program.

By eliminating the SWREN side of the cross-listed listed courses, Renison will achieve the following: adhere to a requirement of Canadian Association for Social Work Education (the accrediting body for the BSW), reduce inconsistent reporting and teaching credit counts in relation to the equity agreement, support the shift to the new calendar system Kuali, and reduce confusion for students in terms of understanding in which courses they should enroll.

The SWREN offering will be removed and will no longer exist, and the note informing students about registration in the SWREN courses will be removed. The SDS offering will remain active. All units are in agreement with these changes.

Academic Unit ApprovalRationale for Change

This course is being changed to include an antirequisite of PSCI 375 Transnational Migration, which is sufficiently close in substantive content to warrant an antirequisite to ensure students do not take the same content under two separate courses. The course description is also being updated according to how it is currently being taught in our department. The course will support the Legal Studies learning outcomes of Depth and Breadth of Knowledge, Application of Knowledge, and Awareness of Limits of Knowledge by encouraging students to apply socio-legal knowledge, ethical reasoning, and reflexive analytical skills to critically evaluate the relationship between the law and inequality, as well as Sociology learning outcomes of Depth and Breadth of Knowledge and Application of Knowledge by supporting students to define, differentiate, and use sociological theories, concepts, and methodologies to examine patterns of social relationships, processes, interactions, and institutions and to apply sociological theories, concepts and qualitative and quantitative methods and data to understand, examine, and critically evaluate social phenomena including behaviours, institutions, and trends.

Description ⓘ

The course employs a multidisciplinary lens to examine the international legal systems concerned with regulating forced human migration. The course is organized around several key thematic issues such as border securitization, citizenship, intimate migrations, the criminalization of migration, detention, deportation, and resistance efforts. In addition to gaining familiarity with debates in these scholarly literatures, students will enhance their research and critical thinking skills by participating in activities such as group discussion questions or analyses of contemporaneous world events. Upon completion of this course, students should be able to understand, critically assess, and convey key debates relating to patterns of global mobility and strategies of migration control as well as apply course learnings to contemporary examples of migration governance and the struggle for mobility rights.

Academic Unit ApprovalRationale for Change

The SWREN course code of the 100-300 level cross-listed courses served to track a particular group of students who had been conditionally admitted to the Bachelor of Social Work (BSW) program.

By eliminating the SWREN side of the cross-listed listed courses, Renison will achieve the following: adhere to a requirement of Canadian Association for Social Work Education (the accrediting body for the BSW), reduce inconsistent reporting and teaching credit counts in relation to the equity agreement, support the shift to the new calendar system Kuali, and reduce confusion for students in terms of understanding in which courses they should enroll.

The SWREN offering will be removed and will no longer exist, and the note informing students about registration in the SWREN courses will be removed. The SOCWK offering will remain active. All units are in agreement with these changes.

The Department of Sexuality, Marriage, and Family Studies has rebranded with a name change to Sexualities, Relationships, and Families (SRF). The renaming will not alter any of the program plans or requirements. That said, the department has reviewed the course calendar and has reviewed every course and description to ensure there is congruency with the new name. Additionally, efforts have been made to update the course descriptions to be more student centric and highlight learning outcomes. All mentions of the previous SMF subject code and plan names are to be changed and requisites will be updated to reflect these changes.

Academic Unit ApprovalRationale for Change

The Department of Sexuality, Marriage, and Family Studies has rebranded with a name change to Sexualities, Relationships, and Families (SRF). The renaming will not alter any of the program plans or requirements. That said, the department has reviewed the course calendar and has reviewed every course and description to ensure there is congruency with the new name. Additionally, efforts have been made to update the course descriptions to be more student centric and highlight learning outcomes. All mentions of the previous SMF subject code and plan names are to be changed and requisites will be updated to reflect these changes. The changes to the components correct a data transfer error.

Description ⓘ

This course will introduce students to the complexities, tribulations, and joys of navigating sexuality and relationships as humans age. Topics may include physical/biological changes, navigating dementia, youth-focused culture, relationship dissolution and relationship anew, death of partners, family and friends, the menopausal transition, and ageism. Through this course students will increase their understanding of how sexuality and relationships change, grow, and remain the same as people age, and how age intersects with such things as race, gender, sexual orientation, ability/disability, culture, socioeconomic status, and societal expectations, allowing reflection on their own bias, experience, and aging scripts.

Sexual Health & Well-Being

Proposed

Description ⓘ

This course provides students an interdisciplinary overview of sexual health and well-being from a theoretical and practical framework. It unpacks the potential role individuals, communities, and institutions have in defining, preventing, and developing sexual health. Topics may include menstrual equity, STIs and safer sex, chronic and long-term illnesses, 2SLGBTQIA+ sexual health, birth control, and pleasure as health. Students will learn to recognize and challenge potentially harmful normative scripts regarding sexual health and well-being, as well as be given the opportunity to reflect on their own experiences, education, beliefs, and biases in relation to the various dimensions of sexual health.

Existing

Description ⓘ

This course offers a theoretical and empirical examination of sexuality from a health perspective. Approaches to counselling, prevention, and treatment will be discussed. Topics may include sexually transmitted infections (STI) and pregnancy prevention, pregnancy and post-partum health, healthy romantic and sexual relationships, chronic and long-term illnesses, and sexual cancers.

Description

This course will present a concentrated history of the major trends and patterns within the representation of human sexuality and sexual health in 20th- and 21st-century comics art. Students will be introduced to the unique and powerful role that comics have played in representing sexuality and sexual well-being through exposure to various artists and scholars on the subject. Students will explore key concepts through close readings of relevant texts, and through the application of key theoretical materials, modeling the kind of analytical work that students will then produce themselves in both discussion and written assignments.

Academic Unit ApprovalRationale for Change

The Department of Sexuality, Marriage, and Family Studies has rebranded with a name change to Sexualities, Relationships, and Families (SRF). The renaming will not alter any of the program plans or requirements. That said, the department has reviewed the course calendar and has reviewed every course and description to ensure there is congruency with the new name. Additionally, efforts have been made to update the course descriptions to be more student centric and highlight learning outcomes. All mentions of the previous SMF subject code and plan names are to be changed and requisites will be updated to reflect these changes.

Description ⓘ

This course introduces the basics of statistics commonly used in the social sciences for the study of sexualities, relationships, and families. Students will learn about the fundamental components, logic, execution, current debates, and best practices related to basic descriptive and inferential statistics. They will learn to read, understand, and interpret statistics, as well as become critical consumers of statistics. They will develop the skills to conduct quantitative analyses using statistical software and write a quantitative research paper.

Description ⓘ

In the typical health care model most of the attention is focused on the patient and their well-being, often ignoring the health, financial, and emotional impact on those who provide unpaid informal care and support - family and friends. Through the reading of memoirs, students with an interest in aging, health care, and the therapeutic professions will grapple with the profound impact that caregiving during illness has on carers and relationships across the spectrum - from young carers, to intimate partners, to adult children caring for aging parents, and beyond. Discussions will be grounded in the social, legal, and policy contexts.

Description ⓘ

There is a persistent tension in our society about where the responsibility for children lies: with the family or the society. This course examines various topics in Canadian social and family policy that affect children's development and family well-being. Topics may include the legislative provisions in areas such as parenting supports, income security, family law, youth justice, caregiving, and the distinct framework for Indigenous families. Students will use foundational concepts and theories to examine the strengths and limitations of policy to address the needs of families.

Description ⓘ

This course introduces students to the theories and methods of communication as applied to processes of individual, relational, and family consultation and counselling. Through functional experiential activities and written reflections, students will apply course concepts and examine their own thoughts, beliefs, and positionings as they develop and strengthen their communication skills. Through application-based course assignments, students will deepen their understanding of intersectional, anti-oppressive frameworks and apply them to active listening and intentional interviewing across human service contexts and relationships.
