Student focused on finding quality citations and formatting them correctly, as outlined in the guidelines; however, student overlooked entering the associated in-text citations. Description: Plagiarism

Details: Student's first lab report was submitted under another student's name. The report also lacks in-text citations for key statements and contains two reference lists, the second which lists articles having nothing to do with this report. These issues are suggestive of plagiarism. The student explained to the instructor that they worked on a rough draft of the report with a friend, by discussing ideas and sharing references. However, the content within the two reports is distinct. The student was unable to explain the origin of the unusual references cited in the report. Based on a balance of probabilities, it is likely that the list originated, at least in part, from somewhere else.

Degree: Undergraduate                      Year: 4

Penalty/Decision: 0% on the course element, an additional 5% off the final grade, and disciplinary probation. This penalty was mitigated because: 1) the content of the two assignments is very different despite the underlying product being the same; 2) the student did not mean to deceive the instructor and 3) the student was remorseful for their error in judgement. This has not been imposed for the following reasons: 1) the student is in their first year of undergraduate studies, and 2) it was evident that they did not intend to cheat or deceive instructor. A subsequent finding of misconduct will not be mitigated. If the student drops the course, they will incur 15 hours of unpaid community service in a challenging position for an off-campus organization of their choice. To have these hours fulfill the student's penalty: UW needs to endorse the organization; the approved organization must provide a letter of community service and send this letter directly to the UW contact. It would be best to verify that the organization can provide this letter, when the student agrees to work with them. UW contact must receive the letter documenting the community service a minimum of 1 month before the date of the students intended convocation.
